Hansen Also Retains General Manager Role

NEW YORK, AUGUST 14, 2013—Masque Sound, a leading theatrical sound reinforcement, installation and design company, recently announced that Stephanie Hansen has been appointed vice president. In her new position, Hansen will continue to implement and drive the company's overarching vision, with an added focus on expansion opportunities as well as the development and acquisition of new business. She will also continue to perform in her role of general manager, a title she has held since 2008.

"Stephanie has been a vital member of the Masque Sound team since joining nearly 10 years ago," says Geoff Shearing, president, Masque Sound. "Not only does she have all the qualities you look for in a strong leader, but her astonishing track record of success in her role as general manager has made this promotion inevitable."

Hansen first joined Masque Sound in 2004 when she moved to New York City. Spending her first couple of years working in various departments within the company, she gained comprehensive knowledge of all facets of the business. "Stephanie made a point to not only learn the daily ins and outs of Masque Sound, but also to truly invest in the audio industry as a whole, taking note of current trends, new products and key players in the field," says Shearing.

"For the past four years as general manager, Stephanie has performed brilliantly," he continues. "Under her leadership Masque has been able to reduce operating costs while simultaneously improving our already famous customer service and technical abilities. She has done a remarkable job of honing and refocusing the company on what is important, and I feel we are in a perfect position to take a run at the next 75 years!"

Prior to joining Masque Sound, Hansen worked at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology while obtaining her Bachelor's degree at Harvard. During that time, Hansen began her management training while receiving a first-rate education.
